Synopsis

Honey and Jacko are two young Palestinian women determined to follow their dream: football. They play on their own city's team in Bethlehem and are members of the Palestinian women's national football team, formed in the heart of Arab-Israel conflict, in spite of the community's distrust and economic restrictions. Thanks to a football and their willingness to have a better future, Honey and Jacko, together with their football mates, shape their identity living in a land without peace, where sport gives them a chance of redemption and emancipation. Football is their opportunity to engage themselves in an endless dialogue with the outside world, in which they want to be real protagonists.
